The course considers attendant and multifaceted developments in West Africa in transnational and global perspectives, transcending landmarked historical periods up to the 1960s. How do we holistically comprehend developments of the medieval West African empires, the Trans-Atlantic Slave Trade, colonization, decolonization, and much more? This is an African history as much as a world history course. Learning about one allows you to better appreciate the other.

Latin America is a study of contrasts. Landless peasants struggle for social justice while residents of some of the world’s largest cities battle traffic and pollution. Conflicting ideas of progress have charted paths to both democracy and dictatorship as societies experiment with open markets, socialism and revolution. This course surveys both recent trends in Latin America and their historical antecedents.

During the colonial period, over twelve million Africans were enslaved, removed from their homelands, and displaced to different regions of the Americas. These African and African descent peoples responded to colonial violence by making new communities, reshaping their collective identities, and creating diasporic cultures. What role did music play in this process? What does a history of Black Music tell us about processes of racialization and community formation? And what can we learn about historical methods when centering Black subjects and their cultural production? This class will examine different examples of Black Music of the Americas to answer these questions.
THE MEXICAN REVOLUTION AND ITS LEGACIES

A history of the Mexico’s 1910 Revolution and its legacies of violence, popular resistance, and negotiated state rule. The course will explore themes and issues of power and revolution, gender, race, class, religion, youth activism, and indigenous mobilization, among others.
